ASSERTS ACTOR ABDUCTED GIRL

Father of Blanche Culver Also Charges Connor M. Pratt, of Philadelphia, with Threatening Him with Revolver.

MARRIAGE CERTIFICATE SAID TO BE BOGUS ONE.

Young Woman Once Got $5,000 Verdict in Breach of Promise Suit Against Rich Old Hoosier Farmer.

Connor M. Pratt, by profession an actor, now out of work, who says he lives at No. 1233 Race street, Philadelphia, was taken before Magistrate Higgins in the Jersey City Police Court twice within an hour to-day, the first time for an alleged attempt to abduct Blanche M. Culver, of No. 71 Morris street, and then for threatening to shoot the entire Culver family, according to George M. Culver, the girl's father. Miss Culver figured in a sensa-tional suft in Indiana a few years ago when she sued an aged wealthy farmer and bank owner for breach of promise. She recovered $5,000.

Marcus A. Kendall is the name of the Indianian who had to pay $5,000 for his attentions to Miss Culver. She went to Rushville on a visit, and before many days had passed Kendall, who is well along in years, showed a decided predilection for the girl's society. He went so far as to give her a team of horses, and when she returned to her quiet home in Jersey City she wore a large diamond ring which she said sealed their engagement.

Wooed by Ardent Actor,

When she visited Rushville the second time there was much frost in the air. Miss Culver couldn't find her former admirer, so she brought suit, and won it, too. The verdict was not all she asked for, however.

Three months ago the magnificent form and theatric presence of Connor M. Pratt flitted across the horizon of M. Pratt fitted across the horizon of Miss Culver's idle days. He was an srdent wooer, and one fine day in early autumn Miss Culver left her home. Her father put two and two together, but the sum was unsolvable to him until a few days ago, when he went to New York in search of his daughter. In court to-day he said that he found Pratt and his daughter living as husband and wife. Pratt flashed a marriage certificate, and the old man, believing that everything was as represented, invited daughter and actor to his home in Jersey City. The three got along so well that Mrs. Pratt a benign-looking weman, soon joined them. The bappiness was complete.

Marriage Certificate Hogus.

Marriage Certificate Bogus. But last night something happened which made a wreck of the interfamily peace. Mr. Culver learned that the marriage certificate was fraudulent, rie told the Magistrate that Pratt admitted that there had been no marriage and that there had been no marriage and that he had a wife now living in Brook-lyn. That started Mr. Culver going and that he had a wife now living in Brook-lyn. That started Mr. Culver going and the was at the police court bright and the was at the police court bright and early to-day to have the matter straightened out. Magistrate Higgins said that as the unlawful act had been committed in New York he had no jurisdiction and advised that the active get out of town at once and leave the currence. A short time later Mr. Culver came at the police court of the latter of the court-room.

A short time later Mr. Culver came and where so many have found riches and where so many have found riches at the police to the product of wide experience directed by intelligence and watchful care.

No revolver was found on Pratt by the policeman who made the arrest and Magistrate Higgins decided again to let the actor without a job go if he promised to leave town.

Pratt showed a ticket to Philadelphia and the last seen of him he was on his way to that peace-ridden city for a plous Christmas.

Practice in the dothes intended for his weading and went to Connecticut to see a friend on whom he counted in his extremity. Before he could return the wedding day had passed and the assembled guests went away commiserating the young woman. But Schulen did return, and his bride-elect has forgiven him. Waited for the Bridegroom.

The wedding guests made a sad party at the Carow nome. They waited hour after hour for the appearance of the bridegroom, but Schulen did not come. The Rev. John Huppenbauer, of St. Paul's Lutheran Church, was on hand to marry the couple, and he remained until all possibility of the bridegroom's presence was nullified on account of the lateness of the hour.

Miss Carow went to bed crying that night, but she had faith in the man to whom she had plighted her troth. Consoled by her mother and sister after the departure of the guests, she waited for some message which would explain the non-appearance of Schulen.
